SM swimmers continue to improve Relay teams take 1st place at Sauk Centre

By Dawn Schimpp Timbs
World reporter

Cardinal swimmers continue to shine; and although their team scores may not reflect their talents, individually, the girls are making waves on the scoreboards.

This week: 10-22 @ HOME 10-30 - Mid STATE @ HOME

The Cards took on the Sauk Centre MainStreeters Oct. 6; and Coach Bruce Onischuk reports that the team had some very good scores.

"Jaelin Beachy won the 100 yard freestyle and the 100 yard breast stroke; and Lynnea Iverson had a real nice swim in the 100 yard freestyle," Onischuk said. "She bettered her time from the meet three days earlier by two seconds," he added of Iverson.

Of further note, Onischuk said, was a 4th place finish by Sarah Holm in the 200 yard freestyle; and some impressive work by Elodie Grelle. "Elodie was called upon to swim some tough races without much rest," he coach said. "She went from the 100 butterfly to the 500 freestyle and right into the 200 freestyle relay. I know she wasn't pleased with her times, but none the less, she did a very nice job."

Taking first place in the 200 freestyle relay were Beachy, Cierra Wavereck, Sarah Paskewitz and Sarah Holm; and in the 400 free style relay another first place went to the four-member team of Iverson, Sarah Holm, Wavereck and Paskewitz.

This is a difficult time in the season, Onischuk said. "The girls have been swimming since mid August...they've had a tough schedule the past few days, with a home meet Oct. 1; then traveling to Fosston Oct. 3; and the meet at Sauk Centre Oct. 6," the coach added.

The Cards will take on Detroit Lakes at a home meet Oct. 22, the final one before the Mid State Conference tournament Oct. 30.

"We continue to improve and that is a real positive," Onischuk said.

Ahead of the storm

Even the most seasoned Minnesotan was probably taken off guard by the blast of wintry weather on October's second weekend, dropping snow over much of the state and temperatures to well below freezing.

When we think of early tastes of winter, the standard seems to be Halloween, usually accompanied by fears that we trick-or-treaters will freeze their little fingers and toes. Many Minnesotans remember the Halloween blizzard of 1991, which dropped two to three feet of snow on much of the state. It was a mid-continent remnant of an uncommonly strong Atlantic weather system, which inspired the book and movie The Perfect Storm.

It's a pretty safe bet that we'll see a return of more seasonable weather before real winter arrives. Still, as I pondered the prediction of more snow and temperatures low enough for it to stay awhile, I felt an urgency to get out for an afternoon of grouse hunting.

What a difference a couple of weeks make. Instead of an impenetrable green jungle, much of the leafy canopy lay soft and wet on the ground, a result of the high wind and snow shower less than 48 hours before. There are still a lot of factors that make grouse shooting difficult, but at least there would be a chance for flushed birds to be seen.

In contrast to the unpleasant warmth of our last grouse trip, I was eager to hit the ground and get walking to begin generating some body heat. As was evident earlier, this is a good year for some of the foods most favored by grouse, especially gray dogwood. Also evident in this little patch of woods was the fact that they were being eaten; a good sign. Another good omen was the sound of a grouse drumming somewhere in the distance.

One of the benefits of damp earth and leaves is better scenting conditions for a dog. But a hunter with a reasonably good nose will pick up scents, too. Not the scent of grouse, but the spicy pungency of withering, decomposing vegetation. It's not fragrant like a flower. But when associated with something as enjoyable as grouse hunting, I find it sweet.

We walked briskly down a grassy trail and veered off it into an especially "birdy" looking tangle of brush. I question whether a hunter can truly feel a grouse's presence; at least not in the way that a dog catches scent. But I believe past experience can tell a hunter when he's in a spot with all the right elements. When it happens, senses come to full alert in anticipation that a bird is near. It happens too often to be mere coincidence.

Up ahead out of sight I hear a grouse flush. So much for the benefit of leaves being down. Moments later, from behind a blown-down tree, another rises, staying low and barely above the dead limbs. It's one of those "Should I?" flushes and I wait to see the bird before beginning to mount the gun to my shoulder.

That's the first mistake, but one I make at some point almost every year. Don't wait, but begin mounting the gun as you turn to catch sight of the flushing bird. It's just as easy to decide whether to shoot with the gun at your shoulder and you'll be ready for what may be a very brief chance. I wait too long and don't fire. Replaying the scene in my mind, I probably could have taken the shot.

Daisy and I head back west, then veer south to walk a patch of brush-choked grassy meadow, thick with willow, alder, hazel and dogwood, with grass and wild berry vines underfoot, studded with occasional aspen, birch or scrub oak. It's here, from the base of an alder clump, that another bird erupts.

This time I don't make the mistake of waiting, but fire too soon, before the grouse is even at the top of the alders. Some may believe that you have to shoot with blinding speed to hit grouse. Often just the opposite is true. The rapid shot is often the poorly aimed shot, the gun not fully mounted, the shooter's face off the stock and not
